This is the only statue on the Capitol grounds featuring a former governor with his first lady. The governor featured served in office during the Civil war. Despite his role in the confederacy, he also served as a U.S. Senator from 1880 to 1890.

Unlike the other stops, this object is not a statue. Tucked into the bushes near the Capitol's historic entrance (West face), it can be difficult to find. It commemorates Daniel Boone's travels and features an engraving of Boone and his dog.

This pair was cast in Seville, Spain, in 1856. They were originally located at Fort San Felipe near Manila Bay in the Philippines. They were given to the U.S. Department of the Navy and later donated to the state to honor Lieutenant Thomas M. Brumby, a Marietta native and key negotiator in the 1898 surrender of Manila.

Also known by its scientific name, Pinus Taeda, this tree is the second most common in the U.S. Although it's not Georgia's official tree, it plays a key role in the state's timber industry.

Most of the building's exterior stone came from Indiana, but this object is made of Georgia marble. It also contains a time capsule with objects dating to the Capitol's reconstruction.

This small statue on the east side of the building commemorates the struggle African Americans endured from enslavement to serving in the state legislature. Unveiled in 1978 by Georgia's first Legislative Black Caucus, it also memorializes the thirty-three African-American legislators who were illegally expelled from Georgia's General Assembly in 1868.

This object is located across Capitol Avenue, but it's still visible from the southeast corner of the grounds. This replica of a damaged bell from the 1750s is surrounded by 15 flagpoles - one for each of the 13 original colonies, the American flag, and the Liberty Plaza flag.
