- 2) When presented with your results, you can click on any of the titles in the Object Results list to see the full record. Materials that have already been digitized contain a thumbnail image (as in the second result on the example results above) while materials that have not yet been digitized have a gray placeholder image.

You can filter your results with the sidebar menu on the right by Media Type, Collection, or Format. You can also elect to see only materials available immediately online by filtering for the “Digital Online Access” option, the first option on the Filter By menu.

3) If you click something from the Object Results list, you will enter its full record, which looks something like this:

If you have citations from previous research containing materials formerly housed in the Peabody Awards Collection Database or the Newsfilm Database, those are now all within our single database so permanent links to those records will no longer work.

You can find Peabody materials by Peabody number with the prefix “peabody_” (e.g., peabody_46030psr)

You can find Newsfilm content by its clip number, which also appears in the former link after “id:” (e.g., if the persistent link to the previous database was <http://dlg.galileo.usg.edu/news/id:wsbn68155>, search “wsbn68115”).

Materials in the Newsfilm Database were presented on the “clip level,” with individual database records for each news story. These are now combined into a single record for the entire news film reel (about an hour of footage), but you can navigate to a specific clip using the Video Index as seen on page 3.

If you have further reference questions, you can reach out via the information on the Contact page on our website.
